

Decisions about Aboriginal child and family wellbeing must include Aboriginal evidence.

We are working hard to achieve it.

Come to our celebratory project event, and launch of our Policy Brief.

Wednesday May 15, 2019
10am-12pm
Redfern Community Centre
29-53 Hugo St, Redfern

Hear our experience co-creating research
Aboriginal people's leadership of data analysis
Data sovereignty, data linkage and decolonising research
Aboriginal input into decisions about child and family programs

For 12 months a group of us have been collaborating to work on NSW Child Development Study (NSW-CDS) data with UNSW researchers, through the Ngadhuri-nya (to care for) project (said 'naa-jury-nya'). The NSW-CDS includes approx 90 000 children and young people, with 7.5% Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander (about 7000). We have been analysing data on out-of-home-care, child mental health and education, and connections with parents' health and justice system contact.

This is an inclusive event for Aboriginal community members, and service providers, policy makers, researchers and other interested community members. All welcome.

The Policy Brief is intended to guide evidence-informed decisions about child and family wellbeing.

Contact: Megan Williams, Wiradjuri - Megan.Williams@uts.edu.au & 0400 073 358

Ken Zulumovski, Kabi Kabi - Ken@guir.com.au & 0433 346 645

Lowitja Institute funding gratefully acknowledged.