

HAVE YOUR SAY ON FIRST NATIONS TRADITIONAL MEDICINES

Do you think First Nations traditional medicines should be part of mainstream healthcare offered to First Nations patients? Or do you have reservations about this? What do you think needs to change, or must be done, before First Nations traditional medicines can be integrated into the health service where you work? Or are they already integrated?

Have your say about this important topic, by participating in a survey for our important study that is looking at the role of First Nations traditional medicines in First Nations patient's healthcare now and into the future. We want to hear the thoughts of people (18+) working at different types of health services across Australia, that have a significant number of First Nations patients.

Dr Alana Gall, a proud Truwulway woman from the north-east coast of Lutruwita (Tasmanian Aboriginal), leads this research along with ten other researchers, Elders and key sector representatives (8 mob; 3 allies), including from NACCHO and the Lowitja Institute.

SCAN ME

Win 1 of 3 Aboriginal Art Prize Packs!

Each Aboriginal Art Prize Pack includes:

- A 3D printed shell necklace made by kurina (Dr Andrew Gall) a Pakana artist who makes jewellery called "kanalaritja reimagined". Kurina uses a both-ways approach by combining new technologies with his cultural knowledge, to create his art (pictured), and;
- a box of six Aboriginal Art Christmas ornaments from the Welcome to Country shop.