

23 September 2019

Dear HealthInfoNet supporter,

It's only September but the year is already flying by. I'd like to take some time out to acknowledge and thank you for your support, advice and input that continues to make the Australian Indigenous HealthInfoNet what it is today.

Supporting you in your work and study to help you make informed decisions by providing information in a way that is timely accessible and relevant is an ongoing focus.

We listen to you and through co design and co construction, the HealthInfoNet has developed a range of knowledge exchange tools that bring you the evidenced based knowledge and information that you need in multiple ways.

Established in 1997 by former GP and public health specialist, Professor Neil Thomson who saw the need for a resource to bring together all the evidence into one place and making it freely accessible to the sector to save policy makers and health practitioners time and reduce duplication of resources and programs. Our history

That the vision of one man not only continues but is flourishing is testament to Professor Thomson's vision and to the ongoing support of you - one of the many thousands of supporters, partners and users throughout Australia.

The HealthInfoNet continues to provide you with a high quality trusted resource to support your efforts in improving health outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. With a user satisfaction rate of 97%, a suite of multi media tools and portals dedicated to the workforce, the HealthInfoNet remains a vital part of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander health infrastructure.

So again thank you for your ongoing support.

Best regards,

PS - did you know it's our 22nd birthday this week ☺

PPS - we wouldn't be here without you - our users, funders and supporters.
